Tips for creating a space for learning at home:

- Choosing a designated space.
  - A desk in a quiet room is ideal. When that's not possible, look around your home for other areas where you can limit disruptive sights and sounds.
  - Even if you're tight on space, think creatively about any underused areas in your home: A hallway, closet, landing or corner may be the perfect office nook.
  - If your space is limited, keep a basket with all the learning materials in it. Use the basket to convert your kitchen table or some other area in your home into the learning space.
- Decorate the space.
  - If your child helps to design their workspace, he or she will have ownership of it. This is their office, and needs to be treated with respect.

- Establish the space by turning it into a mini-cubicle: Make a three-sided cardboard partition out of file folders that sits on the table, surrounding your child.
- Encourage your child to decorate their space in any way they choose, so they'll look forward to spending time there.
- Organize supplies.
  - Work with your child to fill their space with necessary supplies:
    - Cup filled with writing utensils.
    - Writing paper: Have both lined and unlined paper available.
    - Headphones
- Once school time begins, get rid of distractions. This includes distractions for you and your child. Turn off the television, cell phones, and video games.
